Encouragement and Counseling Ministry

Individuals have asked for suggestions regarding helpful books. My favorite regarding parent/child relationships is Discipline With Love And Logic by Jim Fay and Foster Cline. This book helps parents develop a parenting philosophy and enhance specific parenting responses. It focuses on ways of helping parents and children develop mutual problem solving skills which can be very beneficial for children and youth in a peer setting.

Another book that has been so helpful is Happiness Is A Choice by Frank Minirth and Paul Meier. All of us have experienced set-backs and loss. Sometimes, we "get stuck" in non-productive patterns of thought and interaction that have a negative impact on our relationships and spiritual lives. These authors are helpful in delineating contributing factors that tend to "hold us back" from living emotionally intelligent and accessible lives.

While travelling, Sheri and I recently reviewed a book, The Seven Principles For Making Marriage Work by John Gottman. It is based on extensive and innovative research of couples who experience rewarding relationships and couples whose relationship doesn't work well. The author shares what he calls the "Four Deadly Horseman" that are so detrimental to healthy relationships. He presents seven principles that work well and are the fundamentals of successful relationships.

The above mentioned books and authors have made significant contributions in the everyday lives of folks looking for answers to specific situations. However, these authors are professional people with varied spiritual and religious perspectives. Ralph
